Wood as Canvas: The Paint-decorated Furniture of Piedmont NC

June Lucas, Director of Research, Old Salem Museum and Gardens, Winston-Salem, presents a lecture to friends and members of MCHA Sunday, Sept. 27 at 2 p.m. First Baptist Church, 200 E. New York Avenue, Southern Pines. Visitors are welcome.

Her lecture, "Wood as Canvas: The Paint-decorated Furniture of Piedmont NC," elaborates on books and articles published by furniture historians in the last 50 years on late 18th and 19th century furniture produced in the Piedmont region. Most of the research centers on the hardwood case pieces created by well-known cabinetmakers Thomas Day, Peter Eddleman, James Gheen, William Little, Jesse Needham and John Swisegood.

Gaining comparatively little attention in publications are the paint-decorated examples brightening many Piedmont interiors. Furniture makers in this area frequently used pine and poplar as canvas on which to paint everything from traditional fylfot and compass roses to abstract designs almost impossible to interpret. The lecture presents an overview of known groups of paint-decorated furniture from the region as well as discusses the evolution of style changes. From the earliest Pennsylvania-inspired dower chests made in Alamance County to Catawba River cupboard with polychrome religious motifs, the paint-decorated furniture appeals to collectors today as it did to the original owners.

Native of Lenoir, Lucas received her BA, English from Meredith College and MA, English from Appalachian State U. She oversees the OSMG Library and the Museum of Early Southern Decorative Arts Research Center.

Updates

Shaw House Tours by Beverly Offutt

Since January, MCHA docents and our Sarah Mathews have shown The Shaw house properties to approximately 650 visitors. Another 153 saw the Garner House come alive in May for the play, Oldest Living Confederate Widow: Her Confession, with Kelly Hinson adding to the event in her reenactment attire. The Shaw House is blessed with dedicated volunteers consistently giving their time, one such being Nathalie Scott, recently 'retired' after many years of service to MCHA. Her warmth, knowledge and love of history served us well for many years. Accolades also to Marilyn Hartsell for devoting many hours this summer to MCHA's efforts.

The Shaw House is open for tours Tuesday – Friday, 1 – 4 pm and at other times by special arrangement. Bring your out-of-town guests and see how southern Moore County began. You are greeted with a friendly, enthusiastic volunteer, and you'll see us having so much fun that you'll want to join us! Call Beverly or Sarah, 692-2051 for training to be a docent for MCHA.

Many thanks to those who helped with and attended the Oldest Living Confederate Widow: Her Confession, by Allan Gurganus and Jane Holding. The fund campaign for the Britt Sanders Cabin Roof ended with $7,000.00!

Landscaping Update

Plants, fence repair, pruning, and ground maintenance are ongoing with a plan to identify original trees and plants. The plan includes a list of appropriate plant materials to facilitate budgeting and donations and may include a sustainable heritage kitchen garden.

MCHA Textiles and Furniture

Our curator, Marilyn Hartsell, has recently begun efforts to protect MCHA's textiles and furniture from sun damage by tinting various windows in The Shaw House. Thank you, Marilyn!

Funding Updates

MCHA was notified by the Foundation for the Carolinas that it has been named a recipient of the M. Louise Thomas Endowed Charitable Trust in honor of her sister, Marilyn Hartsell. Ms. Thomas, a NC native with an appreciation of history and preservation, is a pioneer in international marketing, being the first woman Sr. Vice-President of marketing for Thalhimers.

The Bryant House Restoration Fund received $2652.90 from the Clenny Creek event. Thanks to all who assisted with the festivities!

To help restore the Garner House roof, MCHA recently received a $1,000 grant from the Community Foundation. The roof's back portion was re-shingled two years ago, with estimates on the front portion expected soon. Given the economic situation, MCHA appreciates such assistance! Other fund-raising ideas are underway for additional monies. MCHA's commitment to preserving these structures for future generations is paramount, so donations toward the Garner House roof are encouraged and much appreciated!

The Man Moore County Was Named For

By William D. Brewer, MCHA Trustee

When you look at a picture of Alfred Moore (1755-1810), the most striking features are the dark eyes and broad forehead. A slight man, he distinguished himself as a soldier, lawyer, and jurist. Born in Brunswick County (think Wilmington, beaches, and Calabash seafood), he had such a distinguished early career that he was only 29 years old when the state decided to name Moore County in his honor.

Moore County was formed in 1784 by taking the western part of Cumberland County; then in 1907 gave up the northeastern corner for the formation of Lee County. As far as we know, Alfred never set foot in Moore County – but he did make his mark on the eastern part of the state during the Revolutionary War.

At twenty, he was a captain in the Continental Army, and fought in the Battle of Moore's Creek Bridge, about 15 miles northwest of Wilmington (a goodly contingent of men from our area, mostly Scots, took part in the battle, fighting on the British side). By the end of the war he was a colonel in the local militia, and regarded as a hero in the Wilmington area for his actions against Major Craig, and later Cornwallis. Also at age 20, he was licensed to practice law. After the war, he was considered one of the two best lawyers in the state, and at age 28 became the Attorney General of North Carolina, serving in that position for nine years. It was in his second year as Attorney General that his name was given to Moore County.

Alfred had extensive plantations, with a number of crops, but he also found time to serve in the state assembly; to serve as a state judge for one year; and at age 44, was appointed by President John Adams to the United States Supreme Court – one of only two North Carolinians so honored. Arguably his most important contribution to our state, though, was his part in the founding of the University of North Carolina. He was one of two men (the second was the other of the two best lawyers in the state, William Davie, who also has a county named after him) who worked from 1784 to 1789 to get legislative approval of a charter for the school.

The town of Brunswick, on the lower Cape Fear River about halfway between Southport and Wilmington, is now a state historic site with a few ruins and some tombs. It was founded by Alfred's grandfather, Colonel Maurice Moore, and before the advent of Wilmington was a major port on the Cape Fear for the planters in the area; this is where Alfred was born. His father, also named Maurice, was the judge who presided at both trials of the Regulators at Hillsborough in 1768 and 1771. The Regulators were the "have-nots" of central (western at the time) North Carolina who were rebelling against "the greed and high-handedness” of the “haves” of eastern North Carolina.

Alfred was buried in 1810 at Belfont plantation, the home of his daughter Anne. In 1905 the North Carolina Society of Colonial Dames saw fit to dig him up and re-bury him at the ruins of St. Philip’s Church at the historic site of Brunswick, the place of his birth.

The source for the above information is NAMESAKE, a book about Alfred Moore by Southern Pines resident Robert Mason. Copies are available at the Shaw House.

One final note: the next time you are in Wilmington, stop by the Pilot House restaurant for a very good meal and a view of the battleship North Carolina, moored across the river (that was intentional) at Eagles Island. Alfred Moore had a rice plantation on that island at an earlier time.
